South Carolina Tree Growers Offer “Trees for Troops”

South Carolina Christmas tree growers in the state have participated in a nationwide “Trees for Troops” effort. Trees were delivered to the May-Lan Christmas Tree Plantation staging area in Pelzer for departure on December 8 by FedEx truck.

For the past several years, the South Carolina Christmas Tree Association (SCTA) has worked with the Christmas Spirit Foundation, FedEx, and the National Christmas Tree Association (NCTA) in an effort to boost the Christmas spirit for U.S. military men and women by providing REAL Christmas trees to military bases in the U.S. and overseas.

As part of the official “Trees for Troops” departure, a WWII veteran was on hand to talk about how important goodwill for the troops was for him and his family during that time. Another veteran from the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq loaded the last tree on the truck in honor of all the families who had a loved one that did not return home.

Looking back . . . moving forward

If didn't hear the music or see all the decorations, I'd never believe it's almost Christmas. 2009 is about gone, as well as a full decade in the new century. Seems like only yesterday we were worried about the Y2K meltdown that never happened. That being said, now's a good time to give my perspective on the state-of-the-state of agriculture and what has transpired in 2009.

Looking back on 2009 . . . On balance, we have had a better-than-average year for production agriculture. While some crops flourished, it's been a difficult year particularly for our dairy farms. It reinforces the breadth of agriculture in South Carolina.

On the weather watch, a few soaking rains washed away the drought declaration from many counties. But, on the other side of that coin, the recent rains have made it a difficult fall harvest. That reminds me to commend our friends at the State Climatology Office who keep us posted on the climate outlook. Also, partners at the USDA Ag Statistics Service provide us with weekly updates on the crop status and rainfall records. Many other individuals and organizations, public and private, behind the scenes play meaningful roles in advancing the business of agriculture. We depend on the our partners like South Carolina Farm Bureau, the Palmetto Institute, SC Advocates for Agriculture, Palmetto Agribusiness Council, and a host of others who provide support as we move forward.

Barnwell Ag Ed Department awarded hydroponics grant

The Barnwell County Career Center Agricultural Education Department is the recipient of a "Hooked On Hydroponics" grant through the National Gardening Association, according to John W. Parris, state director of public affairs with the SC FFA organization. The grant is funded by The Grow Store in conjunction with the Progressive Gardening Association.

"The grant will be used to purchase hydroponic equipment needed to install this unique method of gardening on our campus," said Mindy Sandifer, Agricultural Education instructor at the center. "This was my first attempt at submitting a grant proposal and I look forward to using the funds to make hydroponics an integral part of our plant science curriculum."

Amanda Wiggins, Grants Administrator with the National Gardening Association, said the Barnwell County Career Center proposal was chosen for the award because the application demonstrated clear educational goals and commitment to helping students gain hands-on experience with the joys and wonders of gardening.

Hydroponics is growing plants in water containing fertilizers with or without the use of sand, gravel, vermiculite, sawdust and others to provide mechanical support. Plants grown through hydroponics in greenhouses are highly productive, conserve water and land, and protect the environment.

We have have a new partner this year called 321 Lexington Associates with whom we are collaborating to build the new South Carolina State Farmers Market. The rains that washed away the drought have also delayed the progress of our new market, but the farmers sheds, SCDA laboratory, administration building, and some wholesale facilities are currently under construction. Combined with our Certified South Carolina branding and marketing program, the new market is expected to create an opportunity for an even greater impact on the agricultural economy, as well as our overall economy, in our state.

We have come a long way in only three years with our Certified SC program. Consumers and buyers are now looking for the Certified South Carolina logo wherever they shop. They are asking for locally grown on the menu. We have over 700 members strong in the Certified SC program who are using the logo on their produce and products. At the same time, over 500 retail stores participated in the program this past year. Many have now created their own local marketing strategies which feature the Certified South Carolina brand. The word is getting out to Buy South Carolina. Nothing's Fresher. Nothing's Finer. We have an analysis being prepared by the Moore Business School at USC to determine the the economic potential of our program for our state's economy. I am confident it will indicate that investment in the promotion of our state's agriculture is a wise one. One of the best parts of my job is when farmers tell me what a difference this program has made for them.

This past June, we launched a new marketing initiative called Palmettovore. We looked to generate what called a viral campaign, which employed social networking with Facebook and Twitter to encourage a personal lifestyle of purchasing and consuming produce and products grown and processed in South Carolina. We dressed up some folks in vegetable costumes to 'protest' that they were out of a job if South Carolina shoppers didn't buy them. Like most parents, I use Facebook and the like to see what my sons are up to at college, but the marketing folks tell me we have generated quite a following with our campaign. The www.certifiedscgrown.com web site receives nearly a million hits a month.

We also helped establish farmers markets on both the USC and Clemson campuses. We call it Fresh on the Campus. These are creative ways to reach a new market of consumers who will have a significant influence on buying in the future. Only a handful of colleges around the country have markets on campus, so we are quite proud of this new initiative.

One of our programs that was more evidence of collaboration was our Produce Stand project with the Department of Commerce and Department of Corrections. If you came to our exhibit at the State Fair, you saw one of the installations. The stands were paid for by rural infrastructure program funds through the Department of Commerce and constructed by personnel at the Department of Corrections. The Department of Agriculture has the responsibility to locate suitable sites for the stands. They really do look great.

To boost the effort to market South Carolina agricultural products, the Department along with our partners, Clemson University, the Sea Grant Consortium, and USDA-NRCS brought a new Internet marketing program online. MarketMaker, originally populated with nearly 16,000 farmers, small processors and other businesses, has had more than 1.25 million hits and more than 40,000 users since going live last February.

We also initiated a School Gardens Program and worked with the Department of Education on a pilot School Snack Program in addition to our WIC and Seniors Farmers Market Nutrition Programs. It's all about connecting with local, nutritious food.

Another great initiative was the collection and disposal of nearly 250,000 pounds of unwanted, out-of-date waste pesticides through our Waste Pesticide Recovery Program. They were relieved of the risk of maintaining these pesticides. At the same time, the risk of these pesticides entering the environment was lowered by collecting and disposing of them in a safe and proper manner.

Looking forward . . . While we are proud of what the Department has accomplished this past year, we are focusing on the future, not the past. With that in mind, we have been working on a concept and strategic theme I call 50 by 20 - a ten year goal for South Carolina agribusiness.

Several studies this past year confirmed that the economic impact of agriculture, forestry and its allied industries is $34 billion per year and creates approximately 200,000 jobs. The question I have posed is, "Can the economic impact value increase to $50 billion per year by the year 2020? If so, what will it take to get there?" If we are going to reach that goal, a concerted and strategic effort by agricultural leaders across the state will be needed. Stay tuned to hear more about 50 by 20 in the near future.

As we look forward to celebrating Christmas and the New Year, I fully appreciate our partners throughout the state and nation. I am thankful for those involved in agriculture, directly and indirectly. Like you I am mindful of our troops who will be missing home and the holidays this year to protect us.

And, to my staff and my family, I am thankful that you are always there. Happy holidays, everyone!

Hugh E. Weathers, Commissioner

Trees for Troops

Stuart Smith of Wright’s Christmas Tree Farm in Ward and President of the SC Christmas Tree Association said, “The association has been hard at work collecting as many trees as possible to be sure that our service men and women have a Merry Christmas. We owe them a great debt for their sacrifice to protect our way of life.” In addition, the association collected Christmas cards with appropriate messages which were loaded with the trees on the truck for delivery to the troops.

The nationwide pickup and delivery of trees going to families at U.S. bases began in November. Last year, more than 17,000 trees were donated by more than 700 farms in 29 states. This year, the trees are being delivered to military bases throughout the U.S. and overseas to troops in Kuwait, Afghanistan, Iraq, Qatar and Baghdad and to Bahrain for delivery to the Navy’s Fifth Fleet ships in Southwest Asia.

Hugh Weathers, Commissioner of Agriculture, commends South Carolina growers for their compassion and gift-giving. He asks South Carolinians to follow their lead this holiday season. Spread goodwill to all, especially our troops and their families!

South Carolina Horsemen’s Council Trail Ride

– trail and pleasure riding the number one use of equine in South Carolina

On November 21, Hugh Weathers, SC Commissioner of Agriculture, and his wife, Blanche, participated in the SC Horsemen’s Council (SCHC) Fall Ride at Lakeview Plantation, 875 Cedar Knoll Road in Fairfax.

Trail and pleasure riding is the primary use for horses in South Carolina, according to the 2004 Equine Census. “More and more people are attracted to the Palmetto State because of the beautiful rural landscapes and trails and because of our horse-friendly communities,” said Commissioner Weathers.

“Horses, mules, and donkeys have a special place in the history and culture of our state, but the equine industry also plays a significant role in our economy,” he added. The equine industry is an agricultural industry – and a big one. The total economic impact of the state’s equine industry at the time of the census was nearly $3 billion.

Commissioner and Mrs. Weathers and Riders on the Trail

Trail Master, Hayward Simmons, led the SCHC trail ride after a pancake breakfast, provided by Anne and Mark Kennedy of Camelot Farms of St. Helena Island, and a brief welcome from Carol Deacon, SCHC president. Several members of the Marsh Tacky Association provided horses for Commissioner and Mrs. Weathers and several members of the SCHC Board of Directors.

The SCHC is a non-stock, non-profit corporation organized for the primary purpose of providing information and expertise about activities and issues which impact the common interests of the state’s equine community. Through education, communication, and advocacy, the Council strives to favorably represent the views of the equine community to the general public, the media, government agencies, and elected officials. The Council encourages related research, disseminates information, and generally supports the common interests of the equine industry.
